The Brentano Quartet—fearless, spellbinding players whose attention to detail and to each other give their music freshness and life—bring us "Flights of Fugue," a program that exposes the unflinching heart of late quartets by Shostakovich and Beethoven. Paired arrangements of piano works that mirror each other across the centuries set a deceptively orderly tonal roadmap for the flights of passion and intensity that follow. Both quartets strain the boundaries of the form: massive in scale and throwing expectations about tempo and mood aside, they are revelatory, showcasing the unity, vivid intelligence, and ensemble playing that set the Brentanos apart.

Rob Kapilow's delightfully illuminating What Makes It Great? programs are a masterclass in composer magic: a sudden spark, a fascinating touch, an unexpected swerve. In Anything But Standard, Kapilow demonstrates the unique power of interpretation. Alongside a live band and two vocalists, he'll consider three songs in detail, showing how the singular vocalist Ella Fitzgerald and jazz pianist Oscar Peterson transformed popular film and Broadway songs into jazz standards. Rob shares what makes a lifelong toolkit in listening for the spirit and rhythm of jazz, and implores audiences to experience the alchemy themselves.

Next-generation standouts, the Isidore Quartet are at an exhilarating place in their career: competition wins and young-artist accolades launched them, and now, their programmatic voice, technical mastery, and passion for sharing chamber music with a wide audience have put them among the most in-demand artists on the scene.

After Britten's witty neoclassical Divertimenti and the grief-stricken outcry of Mendelssohn's Quartet in F minor, they team with pianist Jeremy Denk for Brahms' Piano Quintet. Piano and quartet face equal demands in this masterpiece, and the artists offer an electric stylistic interplay: the Isidores' emotional directness in conversation with Denk's searching restraint.

Experience the Pavel Haas Quartet, one of BBC Music Magazine's top 10 string quartets of all time, in a stunning all-Czech program. In Pavel Haas's third and final quartet, shadows gather as war approaches. Leoš Janáček's First Quartet, inspired by Leo Tolstoy's novella The Kreutzer Sonata, pulses with urgency and emotional intensity. The evening concludes with the openhearted warmth of Antonín Dvořák's "American" Quartet, composed among Czech immigrants in Iowa and shaped by the spirituals and folk traditions he encountered there.

EDMAR CASTAÑEDA harp

ANTONIO SÁNCHEZ drums

Turning his instrument into a conduit for creativity, Béla Fleck can do things with a banjo nobody thought possible. Now, serendipity has found him alongside two partners who match him note for note: harpist Edmar Castañeda, who plays bass, melody, and harmony simultaneously, and Antonio Sánchez, a drummer whose rhythm feels like a conversation. As one powerful entity they take you on musical explorations rich with strong melodies, gorgeous harmonies, and sinuous grooves. Audiences leave stunned, delighted, and positively beaming.

Press Quote:

"Béla Fleck has done more to reconceptualize and popularize the banjo than any musician since Earl Scruggs."

NADINE SIERRA soprano

BRYAN WAGORN piano

Praised for her vocal beauty, seamless technique, and abundant musicality, Nadine Sierra is hailed as one of the most promising young talents in opera today. After a string of successful debuts at the Metropolitan Opera, Teatro alla Scala, Paris Opera, and Staatsoper Berlin, she has become a fixture at many of the top opera houses around the world.

She returns to Boston Lyric Opera, where she had early career triumphs as Gilda in Rigoletto and as Tytania in A Midsummer Night's Dream, for a special one-night-only recital performance alongside pianist Bryan Wagorn.

Presented by Boston Lyric Opera in association with Vivo Performing Arts.

Press Quote:

Sierra was luscious, lovely and free throughout her range—daring to glory in her sound, she touched the operatic firmament. The applause went on and on.
